The EVRC-NW codec (Enhanced Variable Rate code) is a narrowband / WideBand) for CDMA2000 systems is a reprocessed codec that can climb from narrow band channel sizes currently supported on CDMA2000 for new broadband channel sizes supplied on CDMA2000 1x Advanced. For GSM networks, all appliances that participate in the call must support the AMR-WB. NO LTE codec, the HD voice is actually built into the pattern back, because the Volta uses AMR-WB. But what is high definition voice that it offers? High definition voice is a generic term that refers to technologies that improve the quality of an audio call or the Part of audio from a video call. For CDMA2000 networks, all a call participants must be connected to a calama site that supports CDMA2000 1x Advanced and each connected handset 1x Advanced Squires must have a chipset that supports 1x Advanced and the new CODEC (contrary case, it will become 1x and the oldest codec). No other CDMA carrier will offer HD voice through CDMA2000 1x Advanced. If you want to use high definition voice, try using a computer-based VoIP solution for now. Since the AMR-WB support device, so the HD voice is possible. Yesterday, Sprint and HTC announced HTC EVO 4G LTE, the latest Sprint EVO telephone series. Consequently, top quality speech codecs can not be used. Atually, there are no networks in the United States that offer HD voice. Better, governments around the world are considering the replacement of traditional circuit-switched telephone networks (POTS) by VoIP networks switched by fiber package. For cellular networks (and possibly hazard networks of Mobile / Saté Lite), HD voice has been developing since 2000. While the device is largely inexceptional it is a modified version of HTC One XL that is going to AT & T it is HD voice. However, the most easy high definition voice update on the GSM side, as there are no major needs to update equipment in the office/tower. However, there are restrictions for high-definition voice implementations currently available. The audio channel for the base stations needs to be zoomed in a bit to open space for the AMR-WB (Adaptive Multi-Rate Wideband) codec, however. However, it is not activated at the moment; it will be activated when T-Mobile deploys LTE. The new codec allows proper encoding of audio in the 50Hz-4KHz band at a sampling rate of 16KHz, as operitif to half of the oldest codec, only narrowband. All wired telephony services currently available (including VoIP-based ones such as Vonage) use narrowband speech codecs, so the capacity for high-definition voice. In addition, the broadband codec actually goes up to 7KHz instead of 4KHz, offering slightly better audio recording capabilities. On the GSM side of things (which includes 2G GSM, HSPA+ and LTE), the high voice setting is largely an update of the main network. Although SIP supports it (and is the basis for VoLTE HD voice support), most wireless networks limit bandwidth to 12 Kbps to prevent too much data from passing through. For the first time in several years, voice calls are getting an upgrade. It will also support HD voice through VoLTE in the next year. The only thing left was for the network operator to enable HD voice on the network. For wired networks (standard telephony), HD voice is not yet available. In addition, it is necessary a multimicrophone ruado cancellation system to take advantage of the codec. With the transition to predominantly digital cellular/satellite communications, as a oment to the traditional terrestrial telephone network with circuit switching, HD voice has become possible for telephony. Sprint has stated that it will enable it with the for the CDMA2000 1X Advanced, but it will probably be virtually useless until the end of 2013.
